Qing Pang and Jian Tong together are the 2006 World Champions, four-time Four Continents champions (2002, 2004, 2008 & 2009) and the 2008 Grand Prix Final Champions. Pang and Tong were born in Harbin, China, the home of Chinese pair skating and both began skating at age six. Tong originally competed as a single skater and then as an ice dancer for two years. After his short ice dancing career, Tong switched to pairs. He and Pang began their skating partnership in 1993 when Tong's coach (and the pair's current coach) Yao Bin teamed the two together. Pang and Tong did not have a strong junior career, due to the fact that the Junior Grand Prix did not exist when they were skating at the junior level. They placed 14th, 9th, and 8th at the World Junior Figure Skating Championships between 1997 and 1999. After that, they advanced to the senior level. Pang and Tong won the silver medal at the 1997 Chinese national championships, but did not represent China at the World Championships until 1999 and became the Chinese national champions the following year. At their first major senior international, the 1999 Four Continents Championships (which was the first Four Continents Championships ever held), they placed 5th and went on to their first Worlds, where they placed 14th. In the 1999-2000 season, Pang and Tong made their Grand Prix debut, and placed 4th at Skate Canada and 5th at the Cup of Russia. At the 2002 Winter Olympics, coming in as the Four Continents Champions, they placed 9th. Following the 2001-2002 season, Pang and Tong began to be contenders, consistently placing on the podium at their Grand Prix events. They won their first World medal (a bronze) at the 2004 World Championships and at the 2006 Winter Olympics in Turin, Italy, they placed 4th behind teammates Shen Xue & Hongbo Zhao, and went on to win the 2006 World Figure Skating Championships.
